

VOL. 20. WHOLE NO. 1,004.

LOUISVILLE, KY., WEDNESDAY, DECEMBER 27, 1865.

NEW SERIES, NO. 4.

President Johnson and the South.

This issue is dedicated to the President and the Radical leaders. His message to Congress on the condition of the Southern States, backed by Gen. Grant's report, is a demand—clear, open, and unequivocal—for a surrender, "quarter or no quarter." The President tells them, and the country, and the world, that the most gratifying condition of things exists everywhere; that the social, political, and moral system, and talked and wrote as it were, was established fact that the institution of slavery had corrupted and degraded the whole population to the level of savages and brutes. They have professed to believe that the etiquette and usages established by society to regulate conduct and intercourse among men, had been abolished. The Constitution no longer protects or tolerates its existence, and it is for the people of Kentucky and their Legislature now to say, whether they will recognize the fact and adapt themselves and their whole-home and necessary restraints.

This, however, was the theory and talk of fanatics to whom the world paid but little attention, and whose opinions were not even heard beyond their own narrow minded and conceited class. They have, however, given up their slaves, and lost their influence in the general denunciation of these communities, and failed to exercise their whole-home and necessary restraints.

General Grant corroborates the President's view of affairs in the South, sees no reason why the Southern States should not be regarded as trustworthy and loyal. He has just traveled through those States; he has talked with the people; he has seen with his own eyes the behavior of both whites and blacks, and, like an honest man, he reports what he knows, without any attempt to pervert or conceal the facts for the benefit of political demagogues. In what respects, then, do the Southern States differ from the Northern? General Grant appears with that of the vindictive and crazy Radicals, who still persist in claiming that the war is not an end, and that the Southern people are bold and obstinate, and not in a proper frame of mind to be received into Congress and participate in the Government. One, the President, and the other the Commander-in-Chief of the armies, whose majestic plans brought the war to a successful issue, have, however, been compelled personally, to complain of the conduct of General Grant, and of the rebellion was concerned, as almost any man, and although General Grant fought the last number of the Chronicle, edited by John W. Forney, in speaking of a disgruntled score which occurred in one of the courts at Washington, not long since, in which two lawyers gave each other the lie, Forney says:

"But the master is not left, to our judgments or wishes. The Constitution, which is the supreme law, pronounces slavery dead, and pronounces it through the hand of Mr. LILLY—Finance—A House bill for the benefit of the late sheriff of Grayson County.
